

MATHEVILLE MINES GOING; PENDING MEET

Men Return to Work This Morning With Promise of Settlement Tomorrow.

(Special to The Argus.)

Matherville, Ill., Sept. 3.—Two hundred miners returned to work this morning after a walkout lasting three days, with the promise of a compromise to be reached at a meeting called for tomorrow morning at the mine. The strike was at the Alden mine, the result of 15 mine drivers who did not receive the extra pay due to extra half-hour's work, in hauling miners to and from work each morning and night.

The men receive $6 a day, but claim that 35¢ cents is due each day for the extra half hour's work put in. Archibald Glicrist, owner of the mine, told the men that a meeting would be held Saturday morning. The men returned to work with this promise.

The teamsters claim that they work an extra half hour longer than other men because they haul the miners to and from work, for which the company promised more pay. When the pay envelope passed out Tuesday did not contain the extra money, the men walked out.
